

ORIGINS OF PRESIDENTS' DAY

Presidents' Day, also known as Washington's Birthday, has its origins in the celebration of George Washington's birthday, which has been observed since the early days of the United States. Washington, the country's first president, was born on February 22, 1732. The holiday was initially established to honor his contributions to the nation.

The date of Washington's birthday was set as a federal holiday in 1879, and it was celebrated on February 22. However, the holiday underwent a change in 1971 when the Uniform Monday Holiday Act was enacted. This law moved the celebration of Washington's Birthday to the third Monday in February to provide more three-day weekends for the nation's workers. Over time, the holiday has also come to recognize Abraham Lincoln, whose birthday is on February 12, and other U.S. presidents.

CULTURAL SIGNIFICANCE

Presidents' Day carries cultural significance as a day to celebrate the leadership and contributions of U.S. presidents to the nation's history and development. While it frequently focused on George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, it has expanded to honor all presidents.

The holiday is marked by various activities, including historical reenactments, educational programs, and ceremonies. It provides an opportunity for people to learn about the achievements, challenges, and legacies of the presidents who have led the country through its history.

IMPLICATIONS FOR ENDING RACISM

Presidents' Day, as a cultural observance, carries implications that can contribute to the wider challenge of ending racism and inequality in the United States.

First, and foremost, it offers a platform for educating people about the historical context of racism in the country. It's an opportunity to learn about the complex legacies of presidents who lived during times of slavery, such as George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. By understanding their roles in addressing or perpetuating racism, individuals can gain valuable historical insights.

Secondly, Presidents' Day can serve as an inspirational moment for change. Celebrating leaders like Abraham Lincoln, who played a pivotal role in ending slavery, can inspire individuals and communities to continue advocating for racial equality. It can be a call to contemporary leaders to address racism and its manifestations in society. It reminds people of the importance of leadership in confronting racial disparities, shaping policies, and fostering inclusion.

Moreover, examining the history of presidents and their actions related to racism provides a historical perspective on how the United States has grappled with racial issues. This perspective informs current efforts to address systemic racism by learning from the past.

Presidents' Day offers opportunities for education, reflection, inspiration, and community engagement that can contribute to wider efforts in combating racism and promoting social justice in the United States. It emphasizes the importance of leadership, civic engagement, and historical understanding in the fight against racial inequality.

George Washington by Gilbert Stuart (1797)/ Image courtesy of Wikipedia

Abraham Lincoln Portrait by Alexander Gardner (1863)/ Image courtesy of Wikipedia

CHALLENGE

Celebrate Black History Month.

Visit a Black History museum <https://nmaahc.si.edu/> or attend a Black history program. Write letters to your elected representatives urging them to address racial disparities and promote inclusive policies.

February 2024

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
				1	2	3 The 15th Amendment to the Constitution *
4	5	6	7	8	9	10
11	12	13	14	15	16	17
18	19 Washington's Birthday (also known as Presidents' Day)	20	21	22	23	24
25	26	27	28	29

* February 3, 1870 - 15th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (ratified in 1870): This amendment granted African American men the right to vote, declaring that the "right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."